

Identity Project

Week 12
April 04, 2017

I started with a record.

I started with a record.
But quickly, my project evolved into something else.

I made mind maps.

And I finally landed on a theme that I wanted to explore further: the ways that we communicate.

The deeper I gt in my research,
the more personal I want to make the project.

So I hosted a dinner party with my friends.
I made posters and name tags and invites.

I'm doing a project about communication.

In order to generate ideas for my project, I'm having a few people over for dinner to talk about the way that we communicate. Most of you don't know each other (at least, not well) but please join if you can. It will be fun. Promise.

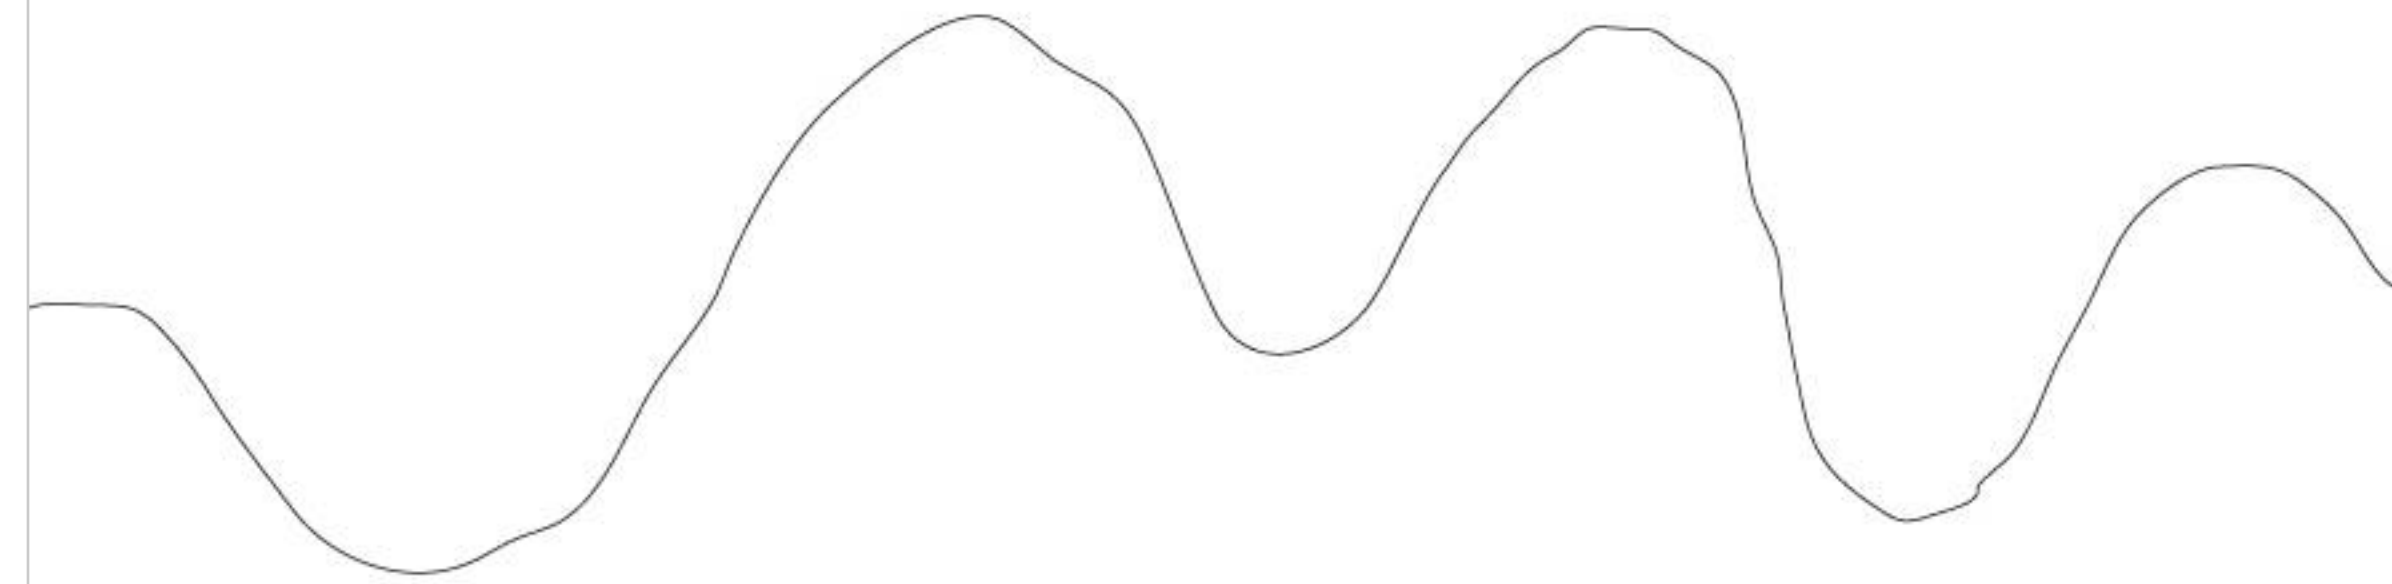

Pizza and booze will be provided. Sound experiments will be conducted.

And we did experiments about sound and communication together, as a group.

We recorded our results in workbooks that I made and I documented the night with photographs.

I made a blog for the event photos.

I really liked the idea of experimentation,
so I decided to publish more experiments about communication for people to do.

I made a website.
Each day for the next year,
an experiment will be posted.

I also made a workbook.
The pages of the workbook match
the exercises that are being posted.

And then I made a magazine to recap the event, my findings, and documentation on experimentation.
